Our range of Cleaning services can help keep staff safe, buildings environmentally sound and welcoming, as well as ensuring your regulatory Health and Safety requirements are met.

- Improved staff confidence

- Illustrate your commitment to the well-being of staff and customers
- Assist in the reduction and control of infection spread
- Reinforcement of the importance of robust cleaning programmes and attitudes.

Cleaning in a Post COVID Scenario

In order to control harmful microorganisms, we need to develop a joint strategy that utilises and stringently follows good cleaning and disinfection processes. Cleaning will physically remove germs but only disinfection will kill them.

However, disinfection done poorly will typically kill the weakest germs, leaving the strongest in place and with the ability to multiply. Likewise, disinfecting without first having cleaned, means germs can hide under soils and reduce the efficiency of the disinfectant.

We must remember, when using disinfectants, we should;

- Ensure we choose the appropriate disinfectant
- Adopt the most appropriate application method
- Use sufficient volume and allow adequate time
- Adhere to the right dilution rates for the task at hand
- Ensure we don't use disinfectants on unclean surfaces
- Apply disinfectants to dry, clean surfaces
- Avoid the over use of disinfectants

Choose the Correct Cleaning Partner

The area of cleaning and disinfection requires thorough research, access to the latest medical opinion/knowledge/discoveries and years of solid experience in facing constant and ever-changing hygiene challenges. Every organisation's needs will differ from the next one, so it is important you mobilise the resources of a responsible cleaning services partner.

Ensure your chosen partner has invested in its workforce to ensure its staff have the necessary skills and equipment to do their job properly, such as PPE. Investment goes beyond just providing the right equipment though, and should be reflected in a workforce that is stable, loyal and prides itself on delivering an excellent service for clients.
